Website ‘could work wonders’

Linking people with the help they need is the aim of a new website launched by Christian social concern charity CARE. At the click of a mouse, enquirers can obtain assistance on a wide range of issues. The online directory – www.carelinkuk.org - offers instant access to specialist caring agencies across the country.

To access the new service, concerned friends, family members, church leaders, project managers or community workers simply need to insert the type of support they are looking for. The CARELINKuk online directory will then provide a list of potentially helpful organisations – free of charge. The aim is to offer information that will assist enquirers in their search for appropriate help.

The website replaces a popular telephone referral helpline formerly run by CARE – which offered callers information on a wide range of issues from marriage counselling to caring for AIDS-stricken families. Users included a woman whose son was battling alcoholism; a father needing debt advice; a girl with an unexpected pregnancy; and a 95-year-old man needing somewhere to stay after hospital.

‘There are bits of information around, but they’re often difficult to get at,’ said CARELINKuk Project Manager Howard Chapman, ‘so we’re pulling them all together in one place.’ The aim is to make CARELINKuk synonymous with the easy finding of specialist caring agencies. We’re empowering Christians to make a difference.’

About 1,000 agencies are already listed, and their number grows daily.

The world is God’s epistle to mankind – his thoughts are flashing upon us from every direction.
