Evangelism in a Spiritual AgeBy Yvonne Richmond and various £11.99 ISBN 0 7151 4054 X

People today are still asking life's big questions. Interest in spiritual matters is booming. So how can the Church offer its ancient wisdom in a way that will make sense to this generation? That's the question being posed by six writers in Evangelism in a Spiritual Age, recently published by the Church of England in its 'Explorations' series.

Yvonne Richmond, Nick Spencer, Rob Frost, Anne Richards, Mark Ireland and Steven Croft tackle the issues and emerge with practical suggestions for the local church. Drawing on research carried out by the Diocese of Coventry in their 2003 'Beyond the Fringe' project, the 'six questions that won't go away' are identified as:

why are we here?

what happens after we die?

the universe: accident or design?

is there a God?

what about the supernatural?

why is there so much suffering in the world?

The 2001 national census figures put Christian affiliation at nearly 72%, and yet this does not translate into church attendance. The new book looks at the challenge for the Church in reaching out and connecting with people searching for spirituality – people who are not currently looking towards the Church for answers to those 'big questions.'
